Introduction

The Legacy of Chikankari

Chikankari embroidery dates back to the Mughal era and was patronized by Empress Noor Jahan. This art involves delicate threadwork, often white-on-white, crafted using over 30 types of stitches like bakhiya, phanda, keel kangari, and more. Traditionally done on muslin, it now finds expression on georgette, silk, cotton, and chiffon—making it accessible and versatile.

Anarkali: A Regal Silhouette

Named after the legendary courtesan Anarkali, this silhouette is characterized by its flowing, floor-length design that flares out from the bust. It accentuates the wearer's height and adds an aura of royalty to any appearance. The fusion of Anarkali's dramatic form with Chikankari's subtle detailing creates an ethereal charm that suits all age groups.
